

The Man I admired most in the world passed away peacefully this morning. My Dad was honest, dependable, and caring. I have never met a single soul that did not like or respect him. He was the man who showed us how to work hard and to take care of our responsibilities. He taught us how to love and care for each other. He earned everything he had and truly never wanted for more. He spent 61 years married to his one and only love. He taught us how to hunt , fish , shoot trap , and enjoy all things life has to offer. I owe this man everything. He was so proud of the life he built with my mom. He was proud of his kids and had a special bond with each and everyone of his grandchildren, he loved them endlessly. There is so much I will miss about him. I am amazed at the strength and courage he has shown over his life time, he is the true Iron Man! 26 years ago he suffered major strokes and was forced into retirement. He fought back to live a fulfilling life, never complaining or saying why me. Since being diagnosed with bladder cancer in 2018 and having multiple organs removed from his body he kept fighting with dignity. I was with him yesterday when he accepted the news that his battle was ending. Although it broke mine, and my families hearts, he remained the strong one. I spent his last night by his side and heard his last words. "I love you". I will be forever grateful I was there with him.

I know he will always be with me, I can see his love and grace in my children.

So proud to be the son of Wayne Jensen!
